INFORMATION ON PROGRAMMES AND EVENTS BY THE REGIONAL HEALTH SYSTEMS

While family doctors play an important role by serving as the first point-of-contact for the acute and chronic care needs of their patients, the 3 Regional Health Systems (RHS) – the National Healthcare Group, National University Health System, and Singapore Health Services – serve as regional health managers to care for the health of the residents living within their respective regions.

Each RHS will deliver integrated, seamless care for approximately 1.5 million residents and coordinate services provided by family doctors and other health and social care partners, guide the development of referral pathways and cater to the health and social needs of residents, ensuring that residents remain healthy across different stages of life. Find out more about the various RHS programmes and events in this section.
